Fire, water, food, shelter, and self-preservation. These are The Survival Triangle(c) elements. These elements, if properly prepared, will keep you alive in a manmade or natural disaster. But which one is the most important? The answer is FIRE . Fire provides heat and light, which are used for many things, including cooking, keeping warm, killing parasites in water, sterilizing wounds, warding off danger, lighting a path, signaling for help, calming bees, and so much more. If you don't believe that Fire is the most important element, look no further than Superstorm Sandy in November 2012. Parts of the east coast received over twelve inches of snow overnight. Over 8,100,000 households lost power, affecting people in 17 states. Many were without power for days and even weeks. Or consider that when you go camping, one of the first things you do is start a fire. Now, imagine that matches, lighters, and wood were not available. Or what if you had to start a fire in the snow or using wet material? What would you do? Preppers are ready for the unknown, and being able to create fire in a Shit-Hits-The-Fan (SHTF) scenario is the number one priority. Can you say the same? Regardless of your answer, The Prepper's Survival Guide on Fire provides information for both the beginning and advanced prepper alike. SHTF: How To Make A
